

County Borough of Bournemouth - Civilian War Dead - (1939 - 45)

The following pages list an alphabetical register of the names and details of civilians who lost their lives in Bournemouth during the 2nd World War, as a result of wartime action.

Most were killed as a direct result of enemy air raids, although some died in accidents. For example, some died during the demolition of bomb damaged buildings, others as a result of accidents involving 'friendly' aircraft - like the crash of RAF Halifax bomber JP137 onto Moordown in 1944.

The details have largely been obtained from records held in the archives of Bournemouth Library (reference files: U769.224) which appear to be taken from Civil Defence records of the period.

Additional lists from the Library collection - along with details from the official Register of Births Marriages and Deaths - have been used to corroborate some of the details.

Further corroboration on the details of those who perished as a result of the worst Bournemouth air raid – that of May 23rd 1943 – have been obtained from the lists published in Angela Beleznyay's excellent book on that raid: 'Incident 48 - Raid on a South Coast Town 1943'

NOTES:

- The lists are fully 'searchable' to allow easy location of any detail. Simply enter the required data using the 'search' facility of your PDF reader.
- The lists include only those who died within the precincts of the Borough of Bournemouth itself, whether they were local residents or visitors. It does not include those who died in nearby locations - in Poole or Christchurch for example. Neither do the lists include the names of any Bournemouth residents who died as a result of wartime activity in other locations.
- The list does not include military deaths, only the deaths of civilians.
- Where the actual word 'Bournemouth' occurs in an address this is omitted by default, to simplify the appearance of the tables. Town names are only included where the victim's home address was not local.
- Abbreviations have been avoided where possible, but where space is limited phrases like 'D/O' for 'Daughter Of' have been employed. These should hopefully be self explanatory.
- There will inevitably be some errors and omissions. Any corrections would be gratefully received....
